To use an analogy from a video game (so you'll be able to understand me), you'll be more like pic related if Elon Musk, Bill Gates, etc get their way. There's your transhumanism buddy, enjoy having your digestive tract removed so the only thing you're capable of eating it a specially synthesized nutrient paste that you can only get from your technocrat overlords.

I hate to admit it, but him posting memes I agree with kinda makes me think he's /ourguy/ and and makes me assume the best of him. Which is exactly your point. He can develop pretty much anything without me thinking there's something (unintentionally) dangerous / malicious behind it - and I'm pretty sure I'm not the only one who turns a blind eye to him, just because he says the right things.

They're too dumb to realize Musk baited them. He posts one little meme and 80% of all twitter marxists, commies, and Stalin fetishists come out of the woodwork to say "it's not funny." Same thing with the "who owns the media." He leaves an open ended meme or question, and those you would have suspected the most just affirm your suspicions by getting incredibly defensive. He is laughing his ass off right now and he has earned every right to.

Sure, I understand that - especially the part about having the same sense of humor mean his values align with mine to a degree. But I've been stabbed in my back even by people closer to me than him, so it would be stupid not to take that possibility into account when he operates on a far more influental scale, pleasing me doesn't serve his interests and he doesn't even know me or that I even exist.

He might be a person with just a childlike curiosity, but there's a reason why children aren't given position to make big decisions. What I'm trying to say that I personally should just be more cautious about him and not get swept by his charming personality. Though if he's not doing anything wrong, I shouldn't demonize him either.

I haven't really done any of that, I've just seen how he behaves, what he says etc and based my judgment of his character on that. He seems like me with a slightly more positive attitude, but there's the issue - upon self-reflecting I really should be more cautious about him.

And there's another issue: if he's so much like me, then why is he a millionaire and I'm dirt poor? He is constantly doing / has done something that I have not. Maybe he's not as similar as I've thought - maybe I have misjudged him? Maybe he prioritizes his time better? So he has different priorities than me? What are those priorities really, how many of them are different? Why?

And there it all begins to unravel: I don't know this person, he just makes me feel good.

This retard gained 500mil+ in funding for a completely doomed from the start project called the hyper loop. That shit isn't going to get through development without a severe drop in estimated performance. People gave him almost a billion in money to invent the bullet train...again. Making a vacuum chamber the size of a space between 2 cities is never going to work, even if the vacuum is just half and not total. How nobody sees that the physics of this project are absolutely no where near the realm of doable for an efficient invention that is an improvement.

You're one of those douchebags who meet 1 Famous person during his life and thinks that makes you hot shit.
I bet every single time someone brings up Elon Musk, you tell them about how you met him once, thinking that somehow that validates you as an interesting person.

not really. I find it highly likely that in Elon pushing for quick timelines with his engineering teams that he constantly runs into road blocks where the largest time sync is the DIVERSITY MAKES US STRONGER culture not allowing him to hire people as he wants. Of course he cant' complain openly about this so what does he do.......... he vents on twitter about it.

If I were Elon of course I would only want Asians and white engineers working there. Of course. Every single non asian non white is slowing everything down. An autist like him is probably hyper aware of it.

Because there's a flip side to that as well: being overly sceptical of a good person can make the person give up doing nice things. Something along the lines of:

"The jealousy harboured by the inferior towards the superior is the reason why the gods left us; the only way to prove wrong the habitual suspicion of maliciousness is to leave us to our own devices - to abandon us, and even then the abandonment is contributed to maliciousness"

Elon Musk is completely based. He’s already said that Mars will not abide by earth laws. He is the man creating a future of freedom for mankind. His goal is to build the ships that transport us to the colonies of a new frontier so that we can escape the oppression of existing government. He’s a fucking visionary, and men in the future will view him with reverence.

Calm down, you do know that there's is a thing called public opinion? And how one negative opinion is worth ten positive ones? Then there's this:
https://journals.aps.org/pre/abstract/10.1103/PhysRevE.84.011130

Having an unshakable demonizing opinion of someone is what creates witch hunts. This is a matter of being exposed to a narrative, this is why propaganda works, this is why pro-mask/anti-mask people constantly bombard everyone around them with their message, why there's a trannylobby etc: it's a matter of exposure, and most people will conform to perceived majority opinion.
My opinions can sway someone fence-sitting to pick a side, thus increasing the numbers on one side, which in turn feeds into the tipping point - which is why I avoid making statements like "Elon is demon" or "Elon is God"; big things are made out of multiple small things.

Now, what would you do if you were doing something nice for people who hated you with no end in sight? You'd leave.
